Notes Dear Steven,
I have a Ph.D. in physics from NYU and understand thermodynamics. You are not on any mailing list. I am generating a database of physicists who are helping the AJP cover up its mistake in publishing that absurd article. If you block me, you won't find out what I do with our communications.

According to the second law of thermodynamics, a gas will fill up the entire container it is in. In outer space there are no containers. Stars evolved because the gravitational forces between hydrogen atoms causes them to form a star. The evolution of stars does not violate the second law. Rather, the second law does not apply to the evolution of stars. Likewise, the second law does not apply to biological evolution.
